New Directions in Assessing Historical Thinking

Edited by Kadriye Ercikan and Peter Seixas
University of British Columbia

"In this volume, leading European and North American scholars and practitioners tackle one of the most important, yet most neglected, topics in the field—assessment. History educators at all levels will benefit from the wide range of practical, thought-provoking, and cutting-edge insights into "how we know" what students know and how they reason in history. More than a work only about assessment, this book maps out a landscape of competing ideas about what it means to think historically." —Keith C. Barton, Professor of Curriculum Studies, Indiana University

"An indispensable volume for anyone interested in the future of history education." —Sam Wineburg, Margaret Jacks Professor of Education and (by courtesy) History, Stanford University

For this volume, Kadriye Ercikan and Peter Seixas have assembled an international array of experts whose various approaches negotiate the demands of theoretical sophistication, empirically demonstrated validity and practical efficiency. Key issues include articulating the cognitive goals of history education, the relationship between content and procedural knowledge, the impact of students' language literacy on history assessments, and methods of validation. New Directions in Assessing Historical Thinking is a critical, research-oriented resource that will advance the conceptualization, design and validation of the next generation of history assessments.
